

Sociology Past Paper Solved Long Questions

Past Paper 2015

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Define ethnocentrism. Explain the advantages and disadvantages of ethnocentrism?

A: 1 Ethnocentrism: Ethnocentrism is the process of evaluating others cultures practices, traits, values and norms through the standards prevailing in one's own-culture. There is a tendency to judge other cultures, societies, groups, and races from one's own standards.

- Ethnocentrism maybe defined as "a belief that one's own group, race, society and culture is good, normal, right and superior to other groups, culture, society and race that are inferior, wrong, abnormal and bad."
- Ethnocentrism is judging another culture based upon the values and standards set in one's own culture. It is a form of bias, where we tend to immediately judge another culture as 'bad' or 'wrong' based upon their actions, if their values are not aligned with our own beliefs.

Ethnocentrism is the phenomenon in which one use one's own culture as a yardstick for judging the ways of other individuals or societies, generally leading to a negative evaluation of their values, norms, and behaviors.

Ethnocentrism is the belief that only our culture is the best in every way."

Advantages and Disadvantages of Ethnocentrism

Advantages:

- An ethnocentric perspective eliminates social order criticisms.
- It can increase the levels of devotion to a community, country, or society.
- Ethnocentrism can enhance solidarity in society.
- It can produce higher levels of self-esteem.
- This view can help an evolving society remember who it has always been.
- Ethnocentrism created the world as we know it today.
- It creates an attitude of independence.
- Ethnocentrism can be a way to improve the world.

Disadvantages:

- Decisions are made based on unrealistic comparisons.
- Ethnocentrism can cause societal polarization.
- It can impact every aspect of life if we allow it to do so.
- Ethnocentrism drives people away from what they love.
- It is a philosophy which limits the human perspective.
- Ethnocentrism can have deadly results.
- This philosophy can create isolation.
- Ethnocentrism limits the choices that people can make.
- It hinders the work of cultural assimilation.

Q: 2 Explain any two types of groups and their characteristics?

A: 2 Followings are two types of social groups:

- 1. Primary Groups & Secondary Groups.
- 2. In-Group & Out-Group.

1. Primary Groups & Secondary Groups:

Primary Groups: Charles H. Cooley was the first sociologist to use the term primary groups to describe such groups as family, neighborhood and children's play groups.

According to Charles Horton Cooley (1864–1929), a primary group is a small social group whose members share personal and lasting relationships.

Primary groups are joined by primary relationships; people who spend a great deal of time together, engage in a wide range of activities, and feel that they know one another pretty well. In short, they show real concern for one another. The family in every society is the most important primary group.

The primary group is primary in the sense that the members are emotionally attached together sharing their basic ways of life with one another.

Primary groups are distinguished by some of the following characteristics:

- Small in size: Primary groups are often small in size.
- Face to Face Interaction: There is face-to-face interaction among members.
- We-Feeling: There is high sentiment or loyalty.
- Intimacy: Identification and close cooperation among members.
- Strong Attachment: There is a high level of emotional, spiritual satisfaction to be derived from involvement in primary social groups.
- Frequent Interaction: Interaction among members of group is frequent and it can be many times a day.

Examples of primary groups are: Family, friends, peers, neighbors, clans, and church members.

Secondary Groups: Secondary group is a large and impersonal social group whose members pursue a specific goal or activity. Secondary groups are large groups whose relationships are impersonal and goal oriented; their relationships are temporary. Secondary group have Secondary relationships which involve weak emotional ties and little personal knowledge of one another.

Characteristics of Secondary:

- Group Large in size: Its members are relatively larger in size than the primary one. They can be thousands and hundreds of thousands of members.
- Less physical proximity: Their physical proximity is rarely found and most of the members reside quite way from each other.
- Impersonal or secondary relation: Its basic elements are indirect, impersonal contractual as well as non-inclusive relations. Usually, they come close to each other for achieving common interests.
- Membership: Membership in this case is mainly voluntary. Individuals are free to join or avoid it. There is no emotional bondage on the members.
- Specific ends or interests: Members of the secondary groups are interested just because they have specific ends to aim at. That's why, it is also called special interest group.
- Social control: Here means of social control are usually formal. Laws and other regulations are enforced on the members by the authorities. The degree of relationship among members is not very strong here. This group is second in importance.

- Examples: The relations of teacher and student, buyer and seller, voter and candidate, class fellows, relatives, members of a political party, members of same profession are examples of secondary group.

2. In-Group & Out-Group:

In-Group: A social group toward which a member feels respect and loyalty.

In groups are the groups with which an individual identifies himself completely. Member of in group has feelings of attachment, sympathy and affection towards the other members of these groups. In groups are generally based on a consciousness of kind. Members of in-group identity themselves with the word 'we' and it is based on the idea that 'we' have value traits and that 'they' lack. Examples: They may be Members of his family, neighborhood, play-group or immediate or close relatives, Pakistani Team with ref to Indian team, outfitters with ref to Diners.

Characteristics of In-Group:

- Ethnocentrism: The members of in group consider their group superior than other groups.
- Similar Behavior: Members of in-group almost show similar behavior and they are similar in many respects. They show similar attitude, opinion and similar reactions.
- We-feeling: Members of in-group have a strong sense of We-feeling by which they identify themselves and distinguish them from others.
- Sense of Unity: Members of in group are united by a strong sense of unity.
- Love, Sympathy and fellow-feeling: This is another important characteristic of in group. Good human qualities like love, sacrifice, sympathy, mutual help and fellow feeling develop only in an in group.

Out-Group: A social group toward which a person feels a sense of competition or opposition 'Out group' members are considered in relation to in-group. Those not included in 'we' and fall in 'they' are the members of out-group, its members are not members of individuals self. We (in-group) the Russians, they (out-group) the Americans: we the Pathans and they the Sayyed are the examples. It means a person member of a certain group falls in its in-group and a person not member to a group falls in his out-group.

Characteristics of out-group:

Like in group, out group is also found in all societies. Out group have the following characteristics:

- Dissimilar behavior is marked between the member of in group and out group.
- Out group identify itself with the help of 'they' or other feeling. Individual is not a member of this group. Hence this kind of feeling develops among them.
- Individual expresses a feeling of antagonism or enmity towards out group. Sometimes individual consider out group as his enemy.
- Individual always expresses or shows negative attitude towards the out group. As a result, he does not identify himself with the out group.
- Out group is not based on ethnocentrism.

Q: 3 Explain any two types of crime with examples?

A: 3 Followings are the two types of crime:

- 1. Organized Crime.
- 2. Corporate Crime.

1. Organized Crime: It is crime committed by structured groups typically involving the provision of illegal goods and services to others. Organized crime syndicates are typically stereotyped as the Mafia, but the term can refer to any group that exercises control over large illegal enterprises, such as the drug trade, illegal gambling, prostitution, weapons smuggling, or money laundering. These organized crime syndicates are often based on racial, ethnic, or family ties, with different groups dominating and replacing each other in different criminal “industries,”

A key concept in sociological studies of organized crime is that these industries are organized along the same lines as legitimate businesses; indeed, organized crime has taken on a corporate form. There are likely senior partners who control the profits of the business, workers who manage and provide the labor for the business, and clients who buy the services that organized crime provides, such as prostitution and drug dealing. In-depth studies of the organized crime underworld are difficult, owing to its secretive nature and dangers. As organized crime has moved into seemingly legitimate corporate organizations, it is even more difficult to trace, although some sociologists have penetrated underworld networks and provided fascinating accounts of how these crime networks are organized. Gang criminality, racketeering, syndicate crime are the major types of organized crimes.

2. Corporate Crime: Corporate crime refers to a crime committed either by a corporation or by the individuals acting on the behalf of a corporation or other business entity. It is wrongdoing that occurs within the context of a formal organization or bureaucracy and is actually sanctioned by the norms and operating principles of the bureaucracy. This can occur within any kind of organization—corporate, educational, governmental, or religious. It exists once deviant behavior becomes institutionalized in the routine procedures of an organization. Sociological studies of corporate deviance show that this form of deviance is embedded in the ongoing and routine activities of organizations. Individuals within the organization may participate in the deviant behavior with little awareness that their behavior is illegitimate. In fact, their actions are likely to be defined as in the best interests of the organization—business as usual. New members who enter the organization learn to comply with the organizational expectations or they leave. Instead of conceptualizing organizational deviance as merely the behavior of bad individuals, sociologists see it as the result of employees following rules and making decisions in more ordinary ways.

Past Paper 2017

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Define social groups. Explain in detail the characteristics of secondary groups?

A: 1 Social Groups: Social group consists of two or more people who regularly interact and share a sense of unity and common identity.

A.W. Green: "An aggregate of individuals which persists in time, which has one or more interests or activities in common and which is organized".

Emory S. Bogardus: "A number of persons, two or more who have common objects of attention, who are stimulating to each other, who have common loyalty and participate in related activities are called as group".

Examples of social groups are: Family, friends, peer group, neighbors, classmates, organizations, clans, and religious groups, relations of teacher and student, buyer and seller, voter and candidate, members of a political party, members of same profession. You could be a member of a sports team, club, church group, college class, workplace, and more.

Characteristics of Social Groups:

Following are the characteristics of Groups:-

- Collection of individuals: Two or more individuals form a group.
- Interaction among Members: Reciprocal Relations exists among its members.
- Mutual awareness: Group members are aware of one another and their behaviors.
- Common Interest: These are formed for Common Goals and Objectives.
- Group Unity & Solidarity: Having Sense of unity and solidarity which results loyalty and sympathy.
- We-Feeling: A sense of we feeling is present among members of groups which develops cooperation.
- Group Norms (Values, customs, traditions, folkways etc.): Group Norms and regulations (written or unwritten) must be followed for group control.
- Influence on Personality: Social groups directly or indirectly influence the personality.

Secondary Groups: Secondary group is a large and impersonal social group whose members pursue a specific goal or activity. Secondary groups are large groups whose relationships are impersonal and goal oriented; their relationships are temporary. Secondary group have Secondary relationships which involve weak emotional ties and little personal knowledge of one another.

Characteristics of Secondary:

- Group Large in size: Its members are relatively larger in size than the primary one. They can be thousands and hundreds of thousands of members.
- Less physical proximity: Their physical proximity is rarely found and most of the members reside quite way from each other.
- Impersonal or secondary relation: Its basic elements are indirect, impersonal contractual as well as non-inclusive relations. Usually, they come close to each other for achieving common interests.
- Membership: Membership in this case is mainly voluntary. Individuals are free to join or avoid it. There is no emotional bondage on the members.

- Specific ends or interests: Members of the secondary groups are interested just because they have specific ends to aim at. That's why, it is also called special interest group.
- Social control: Here means of social control are usually formal. Laws and other regulations are enforced on the members by the authorities. The degree of relationship among members is not very strong here. This group is second in importance.
- Examples: The relations of teacher and student, buyer and seller, voter and candidate, class fellows, relatives, members of a political party, members of same profession are examples of secondary group.

Q: 2 Define Ethnocentrism. With the help of examples can you explain the role of ethnocentrism in creating intolerance in Pakistani society?

A: 2 Ethnocentrism: Ethnocentrism is the process of evaluating others cultures practices, traits, values and norms through the standards prevailing in one's own-culture. There is a tendency to judge other cultures, societies, groups, and races from one's own standards.

- Ethnocentrism maybe defined as "a belief that one's own group, race, society and culture is good, normal, right and superior to other groups, culture, society and race that are inferior, wrong, abnormal and bad."
- Ethnocentrism is judging another culture based upon the values and standards set in one's own culture. It is a form of bias, where we tend to immediately judge another culture as 'bad' or 'wrong' based upon their actions, if their values are not aligned with our own beliefs.

Ethnocentrism is the phenomenon in which one use one's own culture as a yardstick for judging the ways of other individuals or societies, generally leading to a negative evaluation of their values, norms, and behaviors.

Ethnocentrism is the belief that only our culture is the best in every way."

Facts about ethnocentrism in Pakistan: Since the inception of Pakistan, the immediate features of ethnocentrism were started emerging. Hence the political history of Pakistan is divided into two major phases, pre-1971 and post-1971:

Pre 1971: When Pakistan becomes a separate country, it was consists upon a nation that was represent different languages, religions, cultures etc... so basically ethnocentrism has been started from the day one of its inspection. If we talk about to the phase of pre 1971 then it was about constitutional, military reforms and separation of east Pakistan (Bangladesh). Pakistan is one of the countries where ethnicity has been come by its birth. We have not giving interest on the quote of Quaid e Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah when he replies to the Civic Address presented by the Quetta Municipality on 15th June, 1948.

“We are now all Pakistanis—not Baluchis, Pathans, Sindhis, Bengalis, Punjabis and so on—and as Pakistanis we must feet behave and act, and we should be proud to be known as Pakistanis and nothing else”.

But we are focusing on ourselves to labeling Punjabi, Sindhi, Pathan etc... till today. No one is focusing on its justification that he / she only Pakistani so as a result ethnocentrism was become a permanent part of Pakistan. The ethnocentrism has been started in Pakistan first time when our politicians have started inequality and injustice behavior with its own country part that was called East Pakistan.

The main examples of ethnocentrism pre 1971 that we can say also were the causes of separation of East Pakistan:

1- Bengali-Urdu issue: (language issue that was started in Pakistan after 1956)

2- Power adjustments: (based on more superior then other)

Basically these are the two reasons that lead ethnocentrism in both parts of Pakistan and as a result we have faced a separations of one part (East Pakistan).

Post 1971: After the 1971 war, and separation of east Pakistan that becomes Bangladesh, our nation and politicians can't stop ethnocentrism from our country. Although we should had learned great lesson after the separation of East Pakistan and we would become one nation but still we are focusing on ethnocentrism in our society.

Recently the examples that we have been faced about ethnocentrism are following:

1- Movement for creation of Hazara province.

2- Movement for creation of Saraiki province.

3- Movement for creation of Bahawalpur province.

4- Issues and controversy between religious groups specially in sunni and shiah.

5- Abomination between the people of different provinces for example: Punjabi and sindhi, Punjabi and Pathan.

6- Baloches want to their own power and rules in their tribes.

7- Muhajir (MQM) in Karachi has started movements for their protections.

The above are some types of ethnocentrism that we are seen now these days

The most notable ethnocentrism could be seen in the politics where people make their voting power just on the basis of tribes and ethnicity. For example in 2007 after assassination of Benazir Bhutto, people vote PPP just because on the basis of ethnocentrism.

Same as in our country, the Urdu speaker is seem himself as superior then others. Same as in different regions where people considered their own language speakers as superior for example if we go to KPK (Khyber Pukhtun khwa) their resident considered Pashto as superior language and other languages as inferior then Pashto.

Same as if we talk about cultural morals then every Pakistani seem their own culture as superior then of other. For example Sindhis seem their culture as best then Punjabi culture. Pukhtun considered their culture as superior then sidhi / Punjabi. Same as Baluchis considered them self as good then the remained.

In short ethnocentrism is seem as very strong in the basis of pakistan.

Effects / results of ethnocentrism in Pakistan:

These days, Pakistan is in a very critical situation. Pakistan is facing the problems of economical as well as social. Ethnocentrism is one of those problems which are faced by Pakistan and unfortunately there are no any sign of effective control on this situation. In Pakistan, our politicians are not united on one agenda or mission. Every party has different opinions in different issues. Kala bagh dym, hazara province, Sariki and Bahawalpur province, Target killing in Karachi and Quetta on different political and religious groups are the big challenges which are caused by ethnocentrism. So as a result this pic shows how these situation effects on our country.

Q: 3 Explain types of crime in detail?

A: 3 Following are the major types of crimes, as described by many sociologists.

- 1. Crime against Person: These are violent or nonviolent crimes directed against people. Included in this category are murder, aggravated assault, forcible rape, and robbery. Aggravated assault is the most frequently reported personal crime.
- 2. Crime against Property: Such crimes involve theft of property without threat of bodily harm. These include burglary (breaking and entering), larceny (the unlawful taking of property, but without unlawful entry), auto theft, and arson. Property crimes are the most frequent criminal infractions.
- 3. Hate Crimes: These refer to assaults and other malicious acts (including crimes against property) motivated by various forms of social bias, including that based on race, religion, sexual orientation, ethnic/national origin, or disability. This form of crime has been increasing in recent years, especially against other sects and races.
- 4. Crime against Morality or Victimless Crimes: Human acts against moral and ethical values of any society are called crimes against morality. Such crimes are also called victimless crimes as there is no complainant or victim. These include illicit activities, such as gambling, illegal drug use, and prostitution, in which there is no complainant. Nonetheless, there is clearly at least some degree of victimization in such crimes: Some researchers see in many instances prostitution as containing at least one victim—the prostitute himself or herself. Enforcement of these crimes is typically not as rigorous as the enforcement of crimes against persons or property.

5. Elite and White-Collar Crime: Sociologists use the term white-collar crime to refer to criminal activities by people of high social status who commit their crimes in the context of their occupation. White-collar crime includes activities such as embezzlement (stealing funds from one's employer), involvement in illegal stock manipulations (insider trading), and a variety of violations of income tax laws, including tax evasion. Also included are manipulations of accounting practices to make one's company appear profitable, thus artificially increasing the value of the company's stock. Until very recently, white-collar crime seldom generated great concern in the public mind—far less than the concern directed at street crime. In terms of total dollars, however, white-collar crime is even more consequential for society.

6. Organized Crime: It is crime committed by structured groups typically involving the provision of illegal goods and services to others. Organized crime syndicates are typically stereotyped as the Mafia, but the term can refer to any group that exercises control over large illegal enterprises, such as the drug trade, illegal gambling, prostitution, weapons smuggling, or money laundering. These organized crime syndicates are often based on racial, ethnic, or family ties, with different groups dominating and replacing each other in different criminal “industries,”

A key concept in sociological studies of organized crime is that these industries are organized along the same lines as legitimate businesses; indeed, organized crime has taken on a corporate form. There are likely senior partners who control the profits of the business, workers who manage and provide the labor for the business, and clients who buy the services that organized crime provides, such as prostitution and drug dealing. In-depth studies of the organized crime underworld are difficult, owing to its secretive nature and dangers. As organized crime has moved into seemingly legitimate corporate organizations, it is even more difficult to trace, although some sociologists have penetrated underworld networks and provided fascinating accounts of how these crime networks are organized. Gang criminality, racketeering, syndicate crime are the major types of organized crimes.

7. Corporate Crime: Corporate crime refers to a crime committed either by a corporation or by the individuals acting on the behalf of a corporation or other business entity. It is wrongdoing that occurs within the context of a formal organization or bureaucracy and is actually sanctioned by the norms and operating principles of the bureaucracy. This can occur within any kind of organization—corporate, educational, governmental, or religious. It exists once deviant behavior becomes institutionalized in the routine procedures of an organization. Sociological studies of corporate deviance show that this form of deviance is embedded in the ongoing and routine activities of organizations. Individuals within the organization may participate in the deviant behavior with little awareness that their behavior is illegitimate. In fact, their actions are likely to be defined as in the best interests of the organization—business as usual. New members who enter the organization learn to comply with the organizational expectations or they leave. Instead of conceptualizing organizational deviance as merely the behavior of bad individuals, sociologists see it as the result of employees following rules and making decisions in more ordinary ways.

Past Paper 2018

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Explain how Sociology is a scientific discipline and is different from common sense knowledge?

A: 1 Sociology a scientific discipline: Sociology, a social science that studies human societies, their interactions, and the processes that preserve and change them. It does this by examining the dynamics of constituent parts of societies such as institutions, communities, populations, and gender, racial, or age groups.

- Common Sense is defined as routine knowledge that people have of their everyday world and activities.
- It is generally based on what may be called naturalistic or individualist explanation.
- It is taken for granted knowledge.
- It is unexamined.
- Common Sense help sociologist in hypothesis building.
- it provides raw material for sociological investigations.
- Considerations in Sociology are framed by taking into account the commonsensical knowledge.

- When sociology moved closer to Positivism, common sense was discarded. Anti-positivists gave importance to common sense.

THINKER'S VIEWS:

- The fascination of sociology lies in the fact that its perspective makes us see in a new light the very world in which we have lived our lives – Peter Berger.
- Sometimes Sociological knowledge itself becomes a part of common-sense knowledge – Anthony Giddens.
- Common sense and Science are together used which to expand man's understanding of truth – Moore and Reid.
- All philosophy gradually develops from the ordinary day-to-day consciousness – Hegel.
- Common Sense perceptions are prejudices which can mar the scientific study of social world – Durkheim.
- Common Sense is the knowledge that people used to make judgements and navigate their way around the world – Goffman.

Difference between Common-sense & Sociology:

- Common Sense takes cues from what appears on surface but sociology looks for interconnections and causal explanations.
- Common Sense promotes stereotypical beliefs but sociology uses reason and logic.

- Common sense is based upon assumptions while sociology is based upon evidences.
- Empirical testing has no place in common sense knowledge whereas Sociology pursue research with an empirical orientation.
- Common sense knowledge may not be coherent. Birds of a feather flock together and opposites attract convey opposite meanings.
- Common sense knowledge is personal but sociological knowledge results into generalizations.
- Sociology is change oriented while common sense promotes status quoism.

Example: From a commonsensical point of view we may conclude that poverty is the result of lazy behavior. But a cause and effect research through sociology might conclude that poverty is the result of structural inequalities.

Q: 2 What are agents of socialization? For you which agent is now playing the most important role?

A: 2 Agents of Socialization: Socialization agents are the sources from which we learn about society and ourselves. People and groups that influence our self-concept, emotions, attitudes, and behavior are called agents of socialization. Groups and people who serve as socializing agents include family members, friends, neighbors, the police, the employers, teachers, political leaders, business leaders, religious leaders, sports stars, and entertainers. Socialization agents also can be fictional characters that we read about or see on television or in the movies.

Every social experience we have affects us in at least a small way. Some of the important agents of socialization are as below.

- 1. The Family: The parents or family are the first to socialize the child. From the parents he learns language and its dialect. He is taught societal morality and a number of civic virtues. The family is rightly called the cradle of social virtues. The child gets his first lessons of cooperation, tolerance, self-sacrifice, love and affection in the family. The environment of a family influences the growth of a child. The psychologists have shown that a person is what he becomes in a family. In a bad family the child learns bad habits whereas in a good family he acquires good habits. If in a family abusive language is used or a child is physically tortured, it will have a negative impact on him, he will be shy, less creative and narrow minded. On the other hand, if a child is grown up in a family where he receives love, affection, and encouragement, he will definitely possess positive traits such as kindness, confidence and he will be broadminded, and creative as well. The family continues to exercise its influence throughout life.

2. The School: The school is the secondary and formal agent of socialization. In the school the child gets his education which molds his ideas and attitudes. Here he learns punctuality, regularity, cooperation, competition and different linguistic skills. School is also a source of developing intellectual ability of a child through testing his potentialities. A good education system can make the child a good citizen, while a bad education can turn him into a criminal. Education is of great importance in socialization. Only a well-planned system of education can produce socialized, well-mannered and productive citizens.

3. The Peer Group: It is a group of playmates and friends with same age, interests and similar socio-economic status. It is an informal and secondary agent of socialization. The relation between the child and his playmates is one of equality. It is based on cooperation and mutual understanding. Sometime a child acquires such social skills from his friends and playmates which he cannot acquire from parents.

From them he acquires cooperative morality and some of the informal aspects of culture like fashions, fads, crazes, modes of gratification and forbidden knowledge too. The knowledge of such things is necessary from the social point of view. If a friend circle obtains positive traits and are competent then it will have apposite impact on the psyche of a person otherwise it will affect their psyche badly.

4. The Mass-Media: The mass media is a secondary and informal agent of socialization. It has enormous effects on our attitudes and behavior, and on shaping people's opinions about issues. Achievements, information about inventions and technological advancement is shared on media which may be a source of inspiration for many people. Through mass media individuals learn about fashion sense, trending and knowledge about material and non-material aspects of culture.

5. The Religion: Religion has been an important factor in society. In the early society religion provided a bond of unity. Though in modern society the importance of religion has diminished, yet it continues to mold our beliefs and ways of life. In every family some or the other religious practices are observed on one or the other occasion. The child sees his parents going to the masjid or temple or any other religious place to performing religious acts and ceremonies. For example, participation in religious ceremonies not only teaches us beliefs about the hereafter but also ideas about dress, concepts of pak and plect, and manners appropriate for formal occasions. He listens to religious sermons which may determine his course of life and shape his ideas. It influences morality, becoming a key component in people's ideas of right and wrong. The influence of religion extends to many areas of our lives.

6. The State: The state is an authoritarian formal and secondary agent of socialization. It makes laws for the people and lays down the modes of conduct expected of them. The people have compulsorily to obey these laws. If they fail to adjust their behavior in accordance with the laws of the state, they may be punished for such failure. Thus, the state also molds our behavior and citizens learns a lot of moral, legal and ethical code of conduct.

7. The Work Place: It is a place where one performs different economic activities, or indulges in monetary matters. Workplace a secondary and formal agent of socialization. Here individuals learn formal ways of requesting, behaving, communication skills, dress codes, punctuality and authority. In the workplace persons are provided with the opportunity to implement his potentials and skills which he has learned during early socialization.

Q: 3 Define bureaucracy. Explain its characteristics in detail?

A: 3 Bureaucracy: A bureaucracy is an organizational model characterized by a hierarchy of authority, a clear division of labor, explicit rules and procedures, and impersonality in personnel matters. Sociologist Max Weber was interested in the historical trend toward bureaucratization that accelerated during the Industrial Revolution. To Weber, the bureaucracy was the most “rational” and efficient means of attaining organizational goals because it contributed to coordination and control. According to Weber, rationality is the process by which traditional methods of social organization, characterized by informality and spontaneity, are gradually replaced by efficiently administered formal rules and procedures. Bureaucracy can be seen in all aspects of our lives, from small colleges with perhaps a thousand students to multinational corporations employing many thousands of workers worldwide.

Characteristics of Bureaucracy: Weber set forth several ideal-type characteristics of bureaucratic organizations. These characteristics have been elaborated as under.

- Division of Labor: Bureaucratic organizations are characterized by specialization, and each member has highly specialized tasks to fulfill.

- Hierarchy of Authority: In a bureaucracy, each lower office is under the control and supervision of a higher one. Those few individuals at the top of the hierarchy have more power and exercise more control than do the many at the lower levels. Those who are lower in the hierarchy report to (and often take orders from) those above them in the organizational pyramid. Persons at the upper levels are responsible not only for their own actions but also for those of the individuals they supervise.
- Rules and Regulations: Rules and regulations establish authority within an organization. These rules are typically standardized and provided to members in a written format. In theory, written rules and regulations offer clear-cut standards for determining satisfactory performance so that each new member does not have to reinvent the rules.
- Qualification-Based Employment: Bureaucracies require competence and hire staff members and professional employees based on specific qualifications. Individual performance is evaluated against specific standards, and promotions are based on merit as spelled out in personnel policies.
- Impersonality: Bureaucracies require that everyone must play by the same rules and be treated the same. Personal feelings and emotions should not interfere with organizational decisions.

- Separation of Personal and Public Ends: Officials cannot use their official positions for their personal ends. The office property is separated from personal property.
- Discipline: The officials are subject to great discipline in the conduct of their work. Owing to this discipline bureaucracy succeed in achieving the goals efficiently.
- Formal, written communications: It is said that the heart of bureaucracy is not people but paperwork. Instead of the casual, face-to-face talk that characterizes interaction within small groups, bureaucracy relies on formal, written memos and reports, which accumulate in vast files.
- Rationality: It is based on the rationality, means decisions and evaluation in the bureaucracy are made on rational basis rather than personal factors.

Past Paper 2019

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Define socialization and what are the agents of socialization? Discuss with examples?

A: 1 Meaning of Socialization: Socialization is a process interacts with others and shape as well as mold his/her personality according to the prescribed norms of a society.

Definitions of Socialization: Following are some important definitions of socialization by renowned sociologists.

- 1. Macionis: "The life long process through which an individual becomes the proper member of society and develops human characteristics."
- 2. Horton and Hunt: "It is a learning process in which groups interact and learn social norms to develop his/her self."
- 3. According to Ogburn: "It is the process of learning the norms of the group and society".
- 4. Maciver: "It is the process through which social beings learns how to develop relationships and association with others."

5. Bogardus: "A process of learning to live and work together is called socialization."

Every social experience we have affects us in at least a small way. Some of the important agents of socialization are as below.

- 1. The Family: The parents or family are the first to socialize the child. From the parents he learns language and its dialect. He is taught societal morality and a number of civic virtues. The family is rightly called the cradle of social virtues. The child gets his first lessons of cooperation, tolerance, self-sacrifice, love and affection in the family. The environment of a family influences the growth of a child. The psychologists have shown that a person is what he becomes in a family. In a bad family the child learns bad habits whereas in a good family he acquires good habits. If in a family abusive language is used or a child is physically tortured, it will have a negative impact on him, he will be shy, less creative and narrow minded. On the other hand, if a child is grown up in a family where he receives love, affection, and encouragement, he will definitely possess positive traits such as kindness, confidence and he will be broadminded, and creative as well. The family continues to exercise its influence throughout life.

2. The School: The school is the secondary and formal agent of socialization. In the school the child gets his education which molds his ideas and attitudes. Here he learns punctuality, regularity, cooperation, competition and different linguistic skills. School is also a source of developing intellectual ability of a child through testing his potentialities. A good education system can make the child a good citizen, while a bad education can turn him into a criminal. Education is of great importance in socialization. Only a well-planned system of education can produce socialized, well-mannered and productive citizens.

3. The Peer Group: It is a group of playmates and friends with same age, interests and similar socio-economic status. It is an informal and secondary agent of socialization. The relation between the child and his playmates is one of equality. It is based on cooperation and mutual understanding. Sometime a child acquires such social skills from his friends and playmates which he cannot acquire from parents.

From them he acquires cooperative morality and some of the informal aspects of culture like fashions, fads, crazes, modes of gratification and forbidden knowledge too. The knowledge of such things is necessary from the social point of view. If a friend circle obtains positive traits and are competent then it will have apposite impact on the psyche of a person otherwise it will affect their psyche badly.

4. The Mass-Media: The mass media is a secondary and informal agent of socialization. It has enormous effects on our attitudes and behavior, and on shaping people's opinions about issues. Achievements, information about inventions and technological advancement is shared on media which may be a source of inspiration for many people. Through mass media individuals learn about fashion sense, trending and knowledge about material and non-material aspects of culture.
5. The Religion: Religion has been an important factor in society. In the early society religion provided a bond of unity. Though in modern society the importance of religion has diminished, yet it continues to mold our beliefs and ways of life. In every family some or the other religious practices are observed on one or the other occasion. The child sees his parents going to the masjid or temple or any other religious place to performing religious acts and ceremonies. For example, participation in religious ceremonies not only teaches us beliefs about the hereafter but also ideas about dress, concepts of pak and pleet, and manners appropriate for formal occasions. He listens to religious sermons which may determine his course of life and shape his ideas. It influences morality, becoming a key component in people's ideas of right and wrong. The influence of religion extends to many areas of our lives.

6. The State: The state is an authoritarian formal and secondary agent of socialization. It makes laws for the people and lays down the modes of conduct expected of them. The people have compulsorily to obey these laws. If they fail to adjust their behavior in accordance with the laws of the state, they may be punished for such failure. Thus, the state also molds our behavior and citizens learn a lot of moral, legal and ethical code of conduct.

7. The Work Place: It is a place where one performs different economic activities, or indulges in monetary matters. Workplace a secondary and formal agent of socialization. Here individuals learn formal ways of requesting, behaving, communication skills, dress codes, punctuality and authority. In the workplace persons are provided with the opportunity to implement his potentials and skills which he has learned during early socialization.

Q: 2 Define crime and explain its causes in our social set-up?

A: 2 Crime: Crime is one form of deviance, specifically behavior that violates particular criminal laws. Not all deviance is crime. Deviance becomes crime when it is designated by the institutions of society as violating a law or laws. Deviance is behavior that is recognized as violating rules and norms of society. Those rules may be formal laws, in which case the deviant behavior would be called crime, or informal customs or habits, in which case the deviant behavior would not be called crime.

Definitions of Crime:

According to John j. Macionis: “Crime is the violation of criminal laws enacted by a locality, a state, or the federal government.”

According to Merriam Webster: “An illegal act for which someone can be punished by the government especially: a gross violation of law.”

Another definition maybe: “An action or omission which constitutes an offence and is punishable by law.”

Followings are the different causes of crime in our social set-up:

1. Poverty.
2. Peer Pressure.
3. Drugs.
4. Politics.
5. Religion.
6. Background.
7. Society.
8. Unemployment.
9. Unequal rights.
10. Unfair justice system.

1. Poverty: Poverty is one of the main reasons for crime. Countries with high rates of economic deprivation tend to witness higher crime rates than other countries. Since people do not have the means to secure a living in the right ways, they invest their time in criminal activities since they are not only an easy means to get what they want but also do not require any other prerequisite talents. The ever-increasing divide we are witnessing between the rich and the poor can also be attributed to more and more of the poor looking to crime as a means for living. Not being able to earn and sustain themselves leaves people so frustrated that they resort to illegal means to sustain themselves and their families. According to the data collected by National Crime Records Bureau, theft is one of the most common crimes in India. All in all, the wealth inequality and insufficient means to acquire a living in an honest way is driving the poor in India towards a life of crime.

2. Peer Pressure: It is an established fact that peer pressure plays a significant role in the lives of all teenagers and young adults. That is a phase of life where people tend to look up to their friends and believe what they do is the right or rather 'hip and happening' thing to do. So, peer pressure compels them to join the bandwagon. The lack of wisdom and experience these people have just added fuel to the fire. As a result, many individuals in their youth subconsciously get drawn to vices like alcohol consumption and smoking just by looking at their peers. The problem goes out of hand when this peer pressure does not stay restricted to alcohol and cigarettes but extends to other illegal activities involving drugs that have the potential to become an addiction and subsequently ruin their lives.

3. Drugs: Crime and drug abuse are closely related. A person under the influence tends to indulge in criminal activities that they may have not indulged in otherwise. The main problem arises when they get addicted to the drugs and believe they require it to sustain themselves. In such a situation, drug addicts are ready to go to any extent to procure these illegal substances. According to the data collected by the National Institute on Drug Abuse, which is a wing under the National Institute of Health in the United States of America, over 70,000 people succumbed to drug overdoses in America, in the year 2019 alone. These figures are alarming. Under the influence of drugs, people feel the urge to do things that are not only illegal but also have the potential to ruin and at times even end their lives.

4. Politics: The interrelation between politics and crime is overlooked many times. This is problematic as many people have engaged in criminal activities while dealing with political issues. There are umpteen politicians with a criminal record. Additionally, there have been quite a few politicians in developing countries who have also been associated with violent crimes and murders. So many youth members of parties are often given weapons and instructed to handle matters violently during conflicts. Any political dispute, however insignificant, usually leads to rampant violence involving mobs. This not only exposes youth to criminal activities but also puts the lives of various citizens at risk. So, an unstable political situation in a country leads to an exponential increase in the crimes that take place there.

5. Religion: Even today, unfortunately, various divides and issues of society can be attributed to religion. Despite it being a basic human right, many people are deprived of practicing their own religion. This leads to a feeling of resentment in the minds of believers. Moreover, there have been an awful lot of cases involving crimes over different schools of thought too. Innocent lives have been lost in this war over ideological concepts that have existed since time immemorial. This is an extremely sad state of affairs considering that it is already the 21st century and human beings have progressed so much in other areas. There are a huge number of crimes committed by religious fanatics while they try to further their cause by propagating their religion or at times try to establish their religious superiority over other faiths by resorting to destruction and vandalism.

6. Background: Oftentimes the background and family conditions of a criminal can be attributed to the reason behind their crimes. When people believe that they are responsible to provide for their family and they are unable to do so owing to lack of opportunities, lack of education or other such issues that handicap them, they resort to crime. This is a sad state of affairs as in such situations it is highly likely that the criminal would have refrained from engaging in criminal activities had there been sufficient means for them to sustain themselves and provide for their family. This issue does not lead to crimes such as theft alone but also motivates people to commit gruesome acts that put their freedom and lives at risk just so they can make a good amount of money through bribes or ransoms that can be used for their family's sustenance.

7. Society: In today's times, money is one of the most important aspects of everyone's life. The meaning of money is not restricted to the amount of wealth in a person's bank account but is instead also attributed to their societal status, worth, and even values. As a result of this, people value money more than their relationships and happiness. What other people think of a person is more important to them than how they feel. Even schools and universities do not teach children how to be happy and satisfied in life but instead teach them how to make more money, which indirectly attributes wealth to worth. A case in point would be people in awe of students who study and take up professions in the fields of science as opposed to art as conventionally, they have chances of earning more. As a result, people earning less feel unworthy and are compelled to indulge in a life of crime so as to make more money and feel more worthy.

8. Unemployment: The lack of employment opportunities is an issue faced by developing and developed countries alike. A huge portion of the youth of today are unemployed and as per a report by the Confederation of Indian Industry, the youth employment rate is ever-increasing. According to the data recorded by the Centre for Monitoring Indian Economy, the unemployment rate in our country is ever increasing. Naturally, this leaves the youth frustrated as despite spending a lot of time and money on their education they still find it tough to get a good job. This leads to a feeling of resentment towards the system in the minds of many youngsters who then rebel and resort to crimes early on in their lives.
9. Unequal Rights: Deprivation is another significant contributor to the increasing crime rates. People resort to notorious activities when they are deprived of their basic rights since that impedes their means to obtain a livelihood in a conventional and honest way. They have limited options and are already at a disadvantaged position in society that they choose to make money and sustain themselves through hook or crook. This usually involves them engaging in criminal activities.

10. Unfair justice system: The flawed justice system is another major contributor to crimes. When people believe that they are not given their due and are unfairly treated by the system itself, they harbour feelings of resentment towards it and start to rebel. This involves them engaging in criminal activities and doing the opposite of what is expected of them. People try to get justice for themselves when they feel like the state is not going to do the same and tend to commit various acts of crime in their journey to avenge themselves and get what they believe they deserve. Many innocent people resort to crimes when they are wrongly proven to be guilty in the Courts owing to a lack of trust in the system.

Past Paper 2020

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Define culture? And also explain the agents of socialization?

A: 1 Definitions of Culture:

Following are some important definitions of culture by sociologists

Horton and Hunt definition of culture: “Culture is everything which is socially shared and learned by the members of a society.”

Tylor defined: “Culture is that complex whole which include knowledge, belief, art, morals, law, custom, and any other capabilities and habits acquired by man as a member of society.”

It is the totality of human experience acquired during transmission of heritage from one generation to another and to learn the ways of learning, eating, drinking, behaving, walking, dressing, and working is the culture of man.

Every social experience we have affects us in at least a small way. Some of the important agents of socialization are as below.

1. The Family: The parents or family are the first to socialize the child.

From the parents he learns language and its dialect. He is taught societal morality and a number of civic virtues. The family is rightly called the cradle of social virtues. The child gets his first lessons of cooperation, tolerance, self-sacrifice, love and affection in the family. The environment of a family influences the growth of a child. The psychologists have shown that a person is what he becomes in a family. In a bad family the child learns bad habits whereas in a good family he acquires good habits. If in a family abusive language is used or a child is physically tortured, it will have a negative impact on him, he will be shy, less creative and narrow minded. On the other hand, if a child is grown up in a family where he receives love, affection, and encouragement, he will definitely possess positive traits such as kindness, confidence and he will be broadminded, and creative as well. The family continues to exercise its influence throughout life.

2. The School: The school is the secondary and formal agent of socialization. In the school the child gets his education which molds his ideas and attitudes. Here he learns punctuality, regularity, cooperation, competition and different linguistic skills. School is also a source of developing intellectual ability of a child through testing his potentialities. A good education system can make the child a good citizen, while a bad education can turn him into a criminal. Education is of great importance in socialization. Only a well-planned system of education can produce socialized, well-mannered and productive citizens.

3. The Peer Group: It is a group of playmates and friends with same age, interests and similar socio-economic status. It is an informal and secondary agent of socialization. The relation between the child and his playmates is one of equality. It is based on cooperation and mutual understanding. Sometime a child acquires such social skills from his friends and playmates which he cannot acquire from parents.

From them he acquires cooperative morality and some of the informal aspects of culture like fashions, fads, crazes, modes of gratification and forbidden knowledge too. The knowledge of such things is necessary from the social point of view. If a friend circle obtains positive traits and are competent then it will have apposite impact on the psyche of a person otherwise it will affect their psyche badly.

4. The Mass-Media: The mass media is a secondary and informal agent of socialization. It has enormous effects on our attitudes and behavior, and on shaping people's opinions about issues. Achievements, information about inventions and technological advancement is shared on media which may be a source of inspiration for many people. Through mass media individuals learn about fashion sense, trending and knowledge about material and non-material aspects of culture.

5. The Religion: Religion has been an important factor in society. In the early society religion provided a bond of unity. Though in modern society the importance of religion has diminished, yet it continues to mold our beliefs and ways of life. In every family some or the other religious practices are observed on one or the other occasion. The child sees his parents going to the masjid or temple or any other religious place to performing religious acts and ceremonies. For example, participation in religious ceremonies not only teaches us beliefs about the hereafter but also ideas about dress, concepts of pak and pleet, and manners appropriate for formal occasions. He listens to religious sermons which may determine his course of life and shape his ideas. It influences morality, becoming a key component in people's ideas of right and wrong. The influence of religion extends to many areas of our lives.

6. The State: The state is an authoritarian formal and secondary agent of socialization. It makes laws for the people and lays down the modes of conduct expected of them. The people have compulsorily to obey these laws. If they fail to adjust their behavior in accordance with the laws of the state, they may be punished for such failure. Thus, the state also molds our behavior and citizens learns a lot of moral, legal and ethical code of conduct.

7. The Work Place: It is a place where one performs different economic activities, or indulges in monetary matters. Workplace a secondary and formal agent of socialization. Here individuals learn formal ways of requesting, behaving, communication skills, dress codes, punctuality and authority. In the workplace persons are provided with the opportunity to implement his potentials and skills which he has learned during early socialization.

Q: 2 What is Bureaucracy? And also discuss the characteristics of Bureaucracy?

A: 2 Bureaucracy: A bureaucracy is an organizational model characterized by a hierarchy of authority, a clear division of labor, explicit rules and procedures, and impersonality in personnel matters. Sociologist Max Weber was interested in the historical trend toward bureaucratization that accelerated during the Industrial Revolution. To Weber, the bureaucracy was the most “rational” and efficient means of attaining organizational goals because it contributed to coordination and control. According to Weber, rationality is the process by which traditional methods of social organization, characterized by informality and spontaneity, are gradually replaced by efficiently administered formal rules and procedures. Bureaucracy can be seen in all aspects of our lives, from small colleges with perhaps a thousand students to multinational corporations employing many thousands of workers worldwide.

Characteristics of Bureaucracy: Weber set forth several ideal-type characteristics of bureaucratic organizations. These characteristics have been elaborated as under.

- Division of Labor: Bureaucratic organizations are characterized by specialization, and each member has highly specialized tasks to fulfill.
- Hierarchy of Authority: In a bureaucracy, each lower office is under the control and supervision of a higher one. Those few individuals at the top of the hierarchy have more power and exercise more control than do the many at the lower levels. Those who are lower in the hierarchy report to (and often take orders from) those above them in the organizational pyramid. Persons at the upper levels are responsible not only for their own actions but also for those of the individuals they supervise.
- Rules and Regulations: Rules and regulations establish authority within an organization. These rules are typically standardized and provided to members in a written format. In theory, written rules and regulations offer clear-cut standards for determining satisfactory performance so that each new member does not have to reinvent the rules.
- Qualification-Based Employment: Bureaucracies require competence and hire staff members and professional employees based on specific qualifications. Individual performance is evaluated against specific standards, and promotions are based on merit as spelled out in personnel policies.

- Impersonality: Bureaucracies require that everyone must play by the same rules and be treated the same. Personal feelings and emotions should not interfere with organizational decisions.
- Separation of Personal and Public Ends: Officials cannot use their official positions for their personal ends. The office property is separated from personal property.
- Discipline: The officials are subject to great discipline in the conduct of their work. Owing to this discipline bureaucracy succeed in achieving the goals efficiently.
- Formal, written communications: It is said that the heart of bureaucracy is not people but paperwork. Instead of the casual, face-to-face talk that characterizes interaction within small groups, bureaucracy relies on formal, written memos and reports, which accumulate in vast files.
- Rationality: It is based on the rationality, means decisions and evaluation in the bureaucracy are made on rational basis rather than personal factors.

Past Paper 2021

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 What is social control? Differentiate between informal and formal social control with examples from Pakistan society?

A: 1 Social Control: Social control is the basic mean of social solidarity and conformity. Every society or group develops its mechanism for making its members to obey the norms for the smooth functioning of society. These are the attempts of society to regulate people's thoughts and behavior. This process, may be formal or informal, is referred to as social control. Hence all the patterns and mechanism through which society maintains social order and cohesion is called social control. Social control, within sociology, refers to the many ways in which our behavior, thoughts, and appearance are regulated by the norms, rules, laws, and social structures of society.

Meaning of Social Control:

It means to bring people of society within the limits and compel them to adopt conformity to social norms.

Definition of Social Control:

According to Fairchild: It is the process which helps a society to secure conformity to individuals as well as groups.

Horton & Hunt: says that social control is a complete process where a society provides security to its members and conformity to their prospects.

Mannheim: says, it is the collection of methods which can help to influence human behavior to retain social order. It is very clear that it stops deviation to social norms and bring control and conformity in a society. It is the collective behavior through which the process of social order remains constant.

Types of Social Control: Social control tends to take one of two different forms: informal or formal.

1. Informal social control: It refers to our conformity to the norms and values of the society, and adoption of a particular belief system, which we learn through the process of socialization. a. This form of social control is enforced by family, primary caregivers, peers, other authority figures like coaches and teachers, and by colleagues. b. Informal social control is enforced by rewards and sanctions. Reward often takes the form of praise or compliments, but also takes other common forms, like high marks on school work, promotions at work, and social popularity.

2. Formal social control: It is that which is produced and enforced by the state (government) and representatives of the state that enforce its laws like police, military, and other local, provincial and federal agencies. a. In many cases, a simple police presence is enough to create formal social control. In others situations social control is ensured through arresting, imprisonment, fine and penalties.

Q: 2 What is socialization? Give a brief description of the agencies of socialization?

A: 2 Meaning of Socialization: Socialization is a process interacts with others and shape as well as mold his/her personality according to the prescribed norms of a society.

Definitions of Socialization: Following are some important definitions of socialization by renowned sociologists.

1. Macionis: "The life long process through which an individual becomes the proper member of society and develops human characteristics."
2. Horton and Hunt: "It is a learning process in which groups interact and learn social norms to develop his/her self."
3. According to Ogburn: "It is the process of learning the norms of the group and society".
4. Maciver: "It is the process through which social beings learns how to develop relationships and association with others."
5. Bogardus: "A process of learning to live and work together is called socialization."

Every social experience we have affects us in at least a small way. Some of the important agencies of socialization are as below.

1. The Family: The parents or family are the first to socialize the child.

From the parents he learns language and its dialect. He is taught societal morality and a number of civic virtues. The family is rightly called the cradle of social virtues. The child gets his first lessons of cooperation, tolerance, self-sacrifice, love and affection in the family. The environment of a family influences the growth of a child. The psychologists have shown that a person is what he becomes in a family. In a bad family the child learns bad habits whereas in a good family he acquires good habits. If in a family abusive language is used or a child is physically tortured, it will have a negative impact on him, he will be shy, less creative and narrow minded. On the other hand, if a child is grown up in a family where he receives love, affection, and encouragement, he will definitely possess positive traits such as kindness, confidence and he will be broadminded, and creative as well. The family continues to exercise its influence throughout life.

2. The School: The school is the secondary and formal agent of socialization. In the school the child gets his education which molds his ideas and attitudes. Here he learns punctuality, regularity, cooperation, competition and different linguistic skills. School is also a source of developing intellectual ability of a child through testing his potentialities. A good education system can make the child a good citizen, while a bad education can turn him into a criminal. Education is of great importance in socialization. Only a well-planned system of education can produce socialized, well-mannered and productive citizens.

3. The Peer Group: It is a group of playmates and friends with same age, interests and similar socio-economic status. It is an informal and secondary agent of socialization. The relation between the child and his playmates is one of equality. It is based on cooperation and mutual understanding. Sometime a child acquires such social skills from his friends and playmates which he cannot acquire from parents.

From them he acquires cooperative morality and some of the informal aspects of culture like fashions, fads, crazes, modes of gratification and forbidden knowledge too. The knowledge of such things is necessary from the social point of view. If a friend circle obtains positive traits and are competent then it will have apposite impact on the psyche of a person otherwise it will affect their psyche badly.

4. The Mass-Media: The mass media is a secondary and informal agent of socialization. It has enormous effects on our attitudes and behavior, and on shaping people's opinions about issues. Achievements, information about inventions and technological advancement is shared on media which may be a source of inspiration for many people. Through mass media individuals learn about fashion sense, trending and knowledge about material and non-material aspects of culture.

5. The Religion: Religion has been an important factor in society. In the early society religion provided a bond of unity. Though in modern society the importance of religion has diminished, yet it continues to mold our beliefs and ways of life. In every family some or the other religious practices are observed on one or the other occasion. The child sees his parents going to the masjid or temple or any other religious place to performing religious acts and ceremonies. For example, participation in religious ceremonies not only teaches us beliefs about the hereafter but also ideas about dress, concepts of pak and pleet, and manners appropriate for formal occasions. He listens to religious sermons which may determine his course of life and shape his ideas. It influences morality, becoming a key component in people's ideas of right and wrong. The influence of religion extends to many areas of our lives.

6. The State: The state is an authoritarian formal and secondary agent of socialization. It makes laws for the people and lays down the modes of conduct expected of them. The people have compulsorily to obey these laws. If they fail to adjust their behavior in accordance with the laws of the state, they may be punished for such failure. Thus, the state also molds our behavior and citizens learns a lot of moral, legal and ethical code of conduct.

7. The Work Place: It is a place where one performs different economic activities, or indulges in monetary matters. Workplace a secondary and formal agent of socialization. Here individuals learn formal ways of requesting, behaving, communication skills, dress codes, punctuality and authority. In the workplace persons are provided with the opportunity to implement his potentials and skills which he has learned during early socialization.

Q: 3 What is Social deviance? How does deviance affirm cultural values and norms? Explain.

A: 3 Meaning of Deviance: Deviance is violation of norms. It is breaking the norms of society, social manners and code of conduct in business and mutual agreements between the parties. It is against the social manners of family and marriage. It is the breaking of promise and breaking the law of state like committing crimes. Any violation of norm is Deviance. It is natural that man deviates from norms. This deviation when grows serious it is a problem. If it is ordinary there is no problem. Hundred percent control on behavior of man is impossible.

Definitions:

- 1. Horton and Hunt define: "It is any failure to conform to customary norms".
- 2. Louise Weston says: "Behavior that is contrary to the standards of conduct or social expectations of a given group or society".
- 3. Ian Robertson mentioned Deviance as: "Behavior that violates significant social norms and is disapproved by large numbers of people as result".

Examples: killing somebody, telling a lie, braking traffic roles, abusing, disobeying parents, violation of religious norms and social customs.

Affirmation Of Cultural Norms And Values: Seeing a person punished for a deviant act reinforces what a society sees as acceptable or unacceptable behavior. Sentencing a thief to prison affirms our culturally held value that stealing is wrong. Just as some people believe that the concept of God could not exist without the concept of the devil, deviance helps us affirm and define our own norms.

Clarification of Right And Wrong: Responses to deviant behavior help individuals distinguish between right and wrong. When a student cheats on a test and receives a failing grade for the course, the rest of the class learns that cheating is wrong and will not be tolerated.

Unification of Others In Society: Responses to deviance can bring people closer together. In the aftermath of the attacks on September 11, 2001, people across the United States, and even the world, were united in their shock and grief. There was a surge in patriotic feeling and a sense of social unity among the citizens of the United States.

Promoting Social Change: Deviance can also encourage the dominant society to consider alternative norms and values. Rosa Parks's act of deviance in Montgomery, Alabama, in 1955 led to the U.S. Supreme Court's declaration that segregation on public transportation was unconstitutional.

Strain theory of Deviance: Sometimes people find that when they attempt to attain culturally approved goals, their paths are blocked. Not everyone has access to Institutionalized Means, or legitimate ways of achieving success. Strain Theory, developed by sociologist Robert Merton, posits that when people are prevented from achieving culturally approved goals through institutional means, they experience strain or frustration that can lead to deviance. He said that they also experience Anomie, or feelings of being disconnected from society, which can occur when people do not have access to the institutionalized means to achieve their goals.

Past Paper 2022

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Describe in detail the theory of self by George Herbert Mead?

A: 1 George Herbert Mead: The Social Self:

G.H Mead (1863-1931) developed a theory of social behaviorism to explain how social experience creates individual personality. There is the power of environment to shape behavior.

Mead's central concept is self that part of an individual's personality composed of self-awareness and self-image. For Mead:

I. The self develops only with social experience. The self is not part of body, and it does not exist at birth. Self develops only as the individual interacts with others. In the absence of interaction (as is evident from the cases of isolated children like Anna, Isabelle, Genie) the body grows, but no self emerges.

II. Social experience is the exchange of symbols. Only people use words, or the wave of the hand, or a smile to create meaning. These symbols are parts of the language, which plays a vital part in the development of self. Self is a product of socialization experiences and that it develops along with our ability to think symbolically.

III. Understanding intention requires imagining the situation from the other's point of view. Using symbols, we imagine ourselves "in another person's shoes" and see ourselves as the person does. We can therefore anticipate how others will respond to us before we act. A simple toss of a ball requires stepping out of ourselves to imagine how others will catch our throw. You may call it as to think symbolically.

Thinking consists of the conversations we carry on in our minds with ourselves about all sorts of things, especially about ourselves. As a child, you eventually developed cognitively to the point at which you were able to use one symbol (a doll, for example) to represent a parent and another symbol (another doll, for example) that represent you. Only then you could engage in role taking- imagining being some -one else and looking from that person's perspective back at yourself as a social object. That is the imitation of the role of others. Out of others. Out of the early social interaction we develop our ability to communicate, our ability to think, and our social self-emerge.

IV. By taking the role of the other, we become self-aware. The self then has two parts. As subject, the self is active and spontaneous. Mead called the active side of the self as “I” (the spontaneous from of the personal pronoun). “I” is the self as subject the active, spontaneous, creative part of self. But the self is also an object, as we imagine ourselves as others use us. Mead called the objective side of the self the “me” (the objective from of personal pronoun). All social experience have both components.

The emergence of self consists of three stages:

1. The Play Stage: During the play stage, a child begins to develop a sense of him/herself as a social object by taking the role of significant others in relation to him/herself. A girl child plays at being her mother or father, which requires investing herself imaginatively into a doll, for example. She then makes the doll behave as she behaves and evaluates and reacts to this behavior of the doll. She mimics the way in which her father or mother reacts to her own behavior. In this way, she begins to make sense of why the parents react to her as they do. At this stage, the child’s self consists exclusively of the ideas she has about herself based on her perceptions of how significant others, one at a time, view that self. (Significant others are the persons who are very important for the individual).

2. The Game Stage: In the play stage, the child took the role of one significant other at a time. In order to play games, however, the child must be able to take the roles of other players in the game simultaneously. In a game (cricket, for example) each player must know what all the other players expect of him in any situation that might come up. Being able to evaluate oneself from the perspective of several significant others simultaneously results in more sophisticated self-concept.

3. The Stage of the Generalized Other: The generalized other represents the imagined perspective of the community or society at large. At this stage of development, the child is capable of evaluating himself from the perspective of community, sub-cultural, or culture norms and expectations. The child tries to shape his behavior in accordance with the expectations of the others and tries to become what others want him to become.

Q: 2 Define Language and describe in detail the functions and dysfunctions that a language may present?

A: 2 Language: Language is a set of symbols. It is source of communication and transmission of culture from one generation to another. Each culture has its own language but human beings have ability to learn others culture's language when they come in a situation of interaction.

- Language is a system of words and symbols used to communicate with other people.
- The primary way in which people communicate with one another is through language and to transmit message from one person to another.
- Language is a set of socially sound pattern, words, and sentences having specific meaning and terminology common to the same culture.
- Language differs from culture to culture and is transmitted from one generation to another.
- English, Spanish, French, Urdu, Punjabi, Hindi etc. But, it also includes body language, slang, and common phrases that are unique to certain groups of people.

Followings are the functions of language:

1. Directive function.
2. Expressive function.
3. Informative function.
4. Creative function.
5. Thinking function.
6. Physiological function.

1. Directive function: It is one of the main functions of language in which we use language for giving directions to the people. These directions are may be orders, commands or requests.

2. Expressive function: It is another major function of language in which people are expressing their feelings, emotions etc. These expressions are may be the expressions of angriness or happiness.

3. Informative function: It is one of the most popular functions of language in which provide information to the people. And also we gain information from the people through language. This information is may be personal information, subjective information or objective information.

4. Creative function: This function is also considered the main function of language, because with this function we create lot of words when are communicating with people. It is a very powerful function of language.

5. Thinking function: This function is very essential function of language, because without language we can't think about anything. We also use language in our thinking process.

6. Physiological function: This function is very common function of language. Physiology of language refers to the organic processes and phenomena associated with speech perception, articulation, and reading.

Followings are the dysfunctions / disorders of language:

- Language disorders refer to an impairment in the use or comprehension of written, spoken, or other symbolized (i.e. sign language) systems of language.
- Language goes in two directions. Either you are trying to be understood or you're trying to understand others. As such, there are two language disorder types that a person can have -- receptive language disorder or expressive language disorder.

- Researchers have found several potential causes of language disorders including biological, neurophysiological, and psychological causes. However, they have yet to be able to pinpoint the precise origin or etiology of language disorders.
- Language disorders in children usually form as a result of some developmental issue. Additionally, if children aren't exposed to language within the critical period they may never fully develop language at all.
- Usually, language disorders that develop in adults are the result of some type of damage to the brain caused by a stroke, brain infection, brain disease, or blow to the head. Psychologists often refer to these disorders as aphasias.

Q: 3 What is a bureaucracy? Write down the ideal characteristics of a bureaucracy. Do you think that bureaucracies in Pakistan process these ideal characteristics?

A: 3 Bureaucracy: A bureaucracy is an organizational model characterized by a hierarchy of authority, a clear division of labor, explicit rules and procedures, and impersonality in personnel matters. Sociologist Max Weber was interested in the historical trend toward bureaucratization that accelerated during the Industrial Revolution. To Weber, the bureaucracy was the most “rational” and efficient means of attaining organizational goals because it contributed to coordination and control. According to Weber, rationality is the process by which traditional methods of social organization, characterized by informality and spontaneity, are gradually replaced by efficiently administered formal rules and procedures. Bureaucracy can be seen in all aspects of our lives, from small colleges with perhaps a thousand students to multinational corporations employing many thousands of workers worldwide.

Characteristics of Bureaucracy: Weber set forth several ideal-type characteristics of bureaucratic organizations. These characteristics have been elaborated as under.

- Division of Labor: Bureaucratic organizations are characterized by specialization, and each member has highly specialized tasks to fulfill.
- Hierarchy of Authority: In a bureaucracy, each lower office is under the control and supervision of a higher one. Those few individuals at the top of the hierarchy have more power and exercise more control than do the many at the lower levels. Those who are lower in the hierarchy report to (and often take orders from) those above them in the organizational pyramid. Persons at the upper levels are responsible not only for their own actions but also for those of the individuals they supervise.
- Rules and Regulations: Rules and regulations establish authority within an organization. These rules are typically standardized and provided to members in a written format. In theory, written rules and regulations offer clear-cut standards for determining satisfactory performance so that each new member does not have to reinvent the rules.
- Qualification-Based Employment: Bureaucracies require competence and hire staff members and professional employees based on specific qualifications. Individual performance is evaluated against specific standards, and promotions are based on merit as spelled out in personnel policies.

- Impersonality: Bureaucracies require that everyone must play by the same rules and be treated the same. Personal feelings and emotions should not interfere with organizational decisions.
- Separation of Personal and Public Ends: Officials cannot use their official positions for their personal ends. The office property is separated from personal property.
- Discipline: The officials are subject to great discipline in the conduct of their work. Owing to this discipline bureaucracy succeed in achieving the goals efficiently.
- Formal, written communications: It is said that the heart of bureaucracy is not people but paperwork. Instead of the casual, face-to-face talk that characterizes interaction within small groups, bureaucracy relies on formal, written memos and reports, which accumulate in vast files.
- Rationality: It is based on the rationality, means decisions and evaluation in the bureaucracy are made on rational basis rather than personal factors.

No, I think in my view bureaucracies in Pakistan are not playing their actual roles. Because in these ideal characteristics, we can see that the very first characteristic is about the division of labor.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of the division of labor is on the basis of merit. It is a good sign of Pakistani bureaucracy. But, sometimes the persons who we give opportunity to a specific task and he doesn't do that task. It should be improved by the officials.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of hierarchy of authority is also very damageable. Because, in some federal and private sectors the persons who are authoritative don't do their duty with honesty. They use their authority and power for their personal desires and advantages not for the country's advantage.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of rules and regulations doesn't follow in many government and private sectors. Just like, Pakistan Railways system is very poor in this sense. Because, in Pakistan Railways there are so many employees and clerks who don't do their duty with honesty. They just come to the work place and mentioned their name in attendance register and go back to their homes. It is totally illegal. According to the rules, new employees cannot change and reinvent the rules. But, it is not followed.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of qualification based employment is not satisfactory. Sometimes, we see that government choose the persons who are totally non-qualified and not illegible for the post of officials. And then management system of bureaucracy is not working good, because you give the opportunity to the person, who doesn't know anything about the bureaucracy.

The best example is the former CM Punjab Sardar Usman Buzdar. A completely unsuccessful CM of Punjab and totally a waste of time.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of impersonality is very rare. Because, mostly we can see in courts that judge gives favor to the persons who are close to him. The judges don't give decisions on the basis of arguments they give decisions according to their personal emotions, feelings and desires. Just like, the former Chief Justice of Pakistan, who gave his decisions in the favor of Imran Khan. Because, Imran Khan was very close to him. And it is totally unlawful.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of separation of personal and public ends is also very poor. In some sectors, you can see that this process is very good, but in most sectors, like Police stations, the police officers use their power for the making of money. Because, when someone files a report in police stations, it is the duty of police officers that registered the FIR. But, they demand money from the person who is complaining. I mean what is this nonsense behavior.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of discipline is not so bad. But, it is just satisfactory. We can see that some government officials follow the rules and discipline and some are not. Only the ISPR is fully disciplined organization in Pakistan.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of formal written communications is according to the paperwork. But the main thing is that how many people follow it. So, we can say that it is just satisfactory.

In Pakistani bureaucracy, the process of rationality is very good in some senses. Like, CSS competitive exams are conducted and selected the persons on the rational and logical bases not on personal factors. But, in some cases, rationality doesn't follow. So, we can say it is little bit satisfactory but, overall it is better.

Past Paper 2023

Q: 1 Answer the following questions?

Q: 1 Define Self. Write a note on Theory of Self Development by George Herbert Mead?

A: 1 Self: In sociology, the concept of the self refers to an individual's distinct identity that is developed through social interaction. It encompasses a person's thoughts, feelings, and perceptions of their own identity and position within society. The development of the self is influenced by various social factors and interactions, contributing to the formation of an individual's unique sense of self-awareness and identity.

George Herbert Mead's Theory of Self Development: George Herbert Mead, an influential American sociologist, proposed a theory of self-development that emphasizes the role of social interaction in shaping the individual's self-concept. Mead's theory introduces the concepts of "I" and "me" to explain the development of the self and its relationship to socialization.

"I" and "Me": Mead's theory distinguishes between the "I," which represents the individual's spontaneous and impulsive aspects, and the "me," which reflects the socialized and conforming aspects of the self. The "I" is the active, creative, and impulsive part of the self, while the "me" is the part of the self that is aware of the expectations and attitudes of others.

Role-Taking Process: Mead proposed a three-stage role-taking process to explain how the self emerges. This process involves the ability to take the perspective of others and understand how they perceive the individual. Through social interactions, individuals learn to anticipate and interpret the responses of others, leading to the development of a self-concept that is shaped by social experiences.

Social Experience and Self-Development: According to Mead, the self is a product of social experience, and its development is rooted in interactions with others. The self emerges through observing and interacting with others, responding to others, and engaging in introspective thought. Mead's theory emphasizes the role of socialization as a lifelong process that shapes the individual's self-awareness and identity.

Q: 2 Write note on following two Cultural Elements? (i) Symbols. (ii) Beliefs.

A: 2 Symbols: Symbols are a fundamental cultural element that holds significant meaning within a society or group. They can be material objects, gestures, sounds, or images that represent complex ideas, values, or emotions. Here are key points about symbols:

Meaning and Representation: Symbols convey meaning beyond their intrinsic qualities. They represent abstract concepts, cultural values, and shared meanings within a society. For example, the national flag is a symbol representing a country's identity and values.

Communication and Understanding: Symbols facilitate communication and understanding among individuals within a culture. They serve as a common language through which people express and interpret ideas, emotions, and beliefs. For instance, religious symbols convey spiritual concepts and beliefs within a faith community.

Cultural Identity: Symbols contribute to the formation of cultural identity and cohesion. They create a sense of belonging and shared heritage among members of a cultural group. Symbols such as traditional attire or national emblems reinforce cultural identity and pride.

Dynamic Nature: Symbols can evolve and acquire new meanings over time. They are subject to interpretation and reinterpretation within different contexts, reflecting shifts in societal values and beliefs. For example, historical symbols may be reinterpreted in contemporary discourse.

Beliefs: Beliefs are another essential component of culture, shaping individuals' perspectives and behaviors within a society. They encompass convictions, values, and assumptions about the world, often rooted in religious, philosophical, or societal teachings. Here are key points about beliefs:

Foundations of Culture: Beliefs form the foundation of cultural systems, influencing norms, traditions, and social practices. They guide individuals' understanding of morality, spirituality, and the nature of existence.

Social Cohesion: Shared beliefs foster social cohesion and solidarity within a community. They provide a common framework for understanding the world and serve as a basis for collective action and cooperation. Beliefs contribute to the formation of social norms and ethical standards.

Cultural Diversity: Beliefs vary across cultures and subcultures, reflecting diverse worldviews and value systems. They contribute to the richness and diversity of human societies, shaping traditions, rituals, and customs unique to each cultural group.

Influence on Behavior: Beliefs influence individuals' attitudes, decision-making, and behavior. They guide ethical choices, interpersonal relationships, and responses to societal challenges. Beliefs are integral to personal identity and self-expression.

Q: 3 Define Culture. Write a note on Types of Culture?

A: 3 Definitions of Culture:

Following are some important definitions of culture by different sociologists.

Horton and Hunt definition of culture: “Culture is everything which is socially shared and learned by the members of a society.”

Tylor defined: “Culture is that complex whole which include knowledge, belief, art, morals, law, custom, and any other capabilities and habits acquired by man as a member of society.”

It is the totality of human experience acquired during transmission of heritage from one generation to another and to learn the ways of learning, eating, drinking, behaving, walking, dressing, and working is the culture of man.

Types of Culture:

Material culture (tangible culture): Physical objects created by man.

These objects that are created by members of the culture, such as art, buildings, weapons, utensils, machines, hairstyles, food, and jewelry dresses etc.

Non-material culture (intangible culture): A group's ways of thinking (including social norms, beliefs, values, and other assumptions about the world) and doing (its common patterns of behavior, including language and other forms of interaction). It is also called intangible culture.

Features/Characteristics of Cultures:

Culture is

- Universal
- learned
- shared
- transmitted
- Changing.

Culture is universal:

- Culture is universal. There is no society without culture. As part of the cultures there are many aspects that are found in almost all the societies.
- For example the institutions like marriage and family, religion, education, polity, economy, and sports are found all over the world.

- All the societies have developed values, norms, beliefs, and other patterns of behavior that govern the system of marriage and family. One could find such a pattern all over the world, and the same is applicable to religion, education, political behavior, economic behavior, and so on.

Culture has variability

- There is variability in the culture. Every society has a culture of its own. It differs from society to society. Culture of every society unique in itself. Cultures are not uniform.

Ways of eating, speaking, greeting, dressing, entertaining, living etc. of different groups of people differ significantly.

Marriage patterns e.g. arrange marriages, love marriages, exchange marriages, marriages by purchase, marriages within as well as outside the kin network, these are the variations that are found in different cultures of Pakistan. Then one could see the differences in wedding ceremonies all over the country.

Religion: Similarly, one can observe difference/ variations in religion all over the world.

Governments system: Kingship, dictatorship, democracy, parliamentary form of democracy or presidential form, adult franchise or selective voting rights, voter age are all variations in the political systems followed by different nations.

Economic systems may also vary from society to society such as socialism and capitalism.

Culture is learned:

- Culture is learned through the process of interaction with others. It is not inherited through the biological process. Culture is not biological programming rather it is social programming.
- It is not an inborn tendency but acquired by man from the association with others, e.g.
- We learn to talk, to walk, and to act from our elders. Human being have the capacity to learn a variety of languages. Similarly, other ways of life, which is culture, are learned.
- Drinking.
- Eating.
- Dressing.
- Walking.
- Behaving.

Culture is shared:

- Culture is not the property of one individual or of a group.
- Culture is something that is shared. It is nothing that an individual can pass but shared by common people of a territory.
- For example, customs, traditions, values, beliefs are all shared by man in a social situation.

These beliefs and practices are adopted by all equally.

- Human being share culture to maintain integrity and to predict others behaviors and acts in a certain situation.

Culture is transmitted:

- Culture is transmitted from one generation to the other.
- It is not transmitted through genes but through interaction. People transmit culture through communication and language is considered mean of communication which passes cultural traits from one generation to another.
- During its lifetime that individual or group tries to pass on its culture to the future generation. This is how every new crop of babies does not start from a scratch rather they build on what they have already received. That is how culture grows and that is how our culture becomes richer and richer.

Culture is changing:

- Culture is continuously changing. The patterns of behavior transmitted by one generation to another are continuously in the process of modification for catering to the changing needs of time and demands of people.

New technologies are developed and are borrowed from other groups and societies. With the increase in the contact between different societies the cultures are changing very fast and may be moving toward some kind of global culture.

